An Old Floor-Walker's Experience with Eboplifters. [Pittsburgh Dispatch.]

He was a tall, slender citizen, with make. The charge of larceny was not clongated pipe-stem legs and a voice like thoroughly established and all of the a fog-horn in the dim distance of a frosty morning. His especial business was walking the floor of a large down-town The Academy Last Night.

A large audience was present last ing that function with a good deal of ginia and by numerous other practicioners of medicine asking that the law be so amended as to provide that all applicants for license to practice medicine in Virginia be required to pass examination before the State Board. That is, in effect, that no applicants hereafter where the matches were supposed to be. The following officers of this post were installed night before last: N. J. Smith, commander; C. W. Burr, senior vicethe last of the stolen handkerchiefs dropped on to the counter. The little peddler squirmed and wriggled, but he couldn't get away, and a few minutes of him and was marching him out tohe said to a reporter who was sitting near him. "The officer will just scare him bad enough to keep him from coming back. We couldn't prosecute him. It would only make us trouble, and wouldn't do him any good. We have had a lot of trouble with children shoplifters lately. They come in on all pre-texts—some for Christmas cards, some to sell trinkets, and a few to buy buttons or a spool of thread. I have caught a good many of them in the last year or so, and in every case the youngsters told me that their parents sent them to steal. - "You would like to have me tell you all I know about shoplifting, would you? Well, it is a pretty old subject, but I believe I can tell you some things you never heard before. In the first place the world at large doesn't have any idea how much shoplifting there is during the holiday season in Pittsburgh. Delaware, Connecticut, Colorado, California, Alabama, Ohio, Pennsylvania, South Carolina, Vermont, West Virginia. Wisconsin, and Kanasa are rigid and severe, but these States protect their medical colleges by recognizing the diplomas of these colleges as a sufficient guaranty of the graduate's fitness to practice medicine.

Calvert Club.

At the annual meeting of the Calvert Club, held in their rooms last night, the following officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, George W. McCann; Vice-President, Joseph A. They are good customers, though, and they don't steal enough to amount to much; so they very often carry away their pilferings in blissful ignorance of any observing eye. Last winter I caught a woman whose husband is worth $500,000 trying to get away with nearly $100 worth of goods under her cloak. I let her go, but I had a bill sent to her husband for what I had seen her take. He paid the amount, but now she deals somewhere else; so I don't know but what we were losers, on the whole."
